

Treatment Interventions

Youth are involved in treatment intervention groups. These groups help youth to look at the way they think and act and help them identify alternative skills which will help them be more successful in their environment. These groups include:

- Aggression Interruption Training (AIT)

Improves social skill competence, anger control, and moral reasoning.

- CounterPoint™

Addresses anti-social attitudes and negative peer influences which are major contributors to the risk of re-offense.

- Girls...Moving On™

Focuses on the unique needs of young women in the criminal justice system, including relationships, emotions and personal histories.

- Substance Abuse

Builds skills to help youth with cognitive, social and emotional strategies for avoiding substance abuse.

- Interactive Journaling®

A writing process that focuses on topics leading youth to positive life changes while strengthening positive, therapeutic relationships between youth and staff.

Integrated Behavior Treatment Model (IBTM)

What is it?

The Integrated Behavior Treatment Model is the map that guides all services received by youth from the time they arrive at the Division of Juvenile Justice (DJJ) until they re-enter the community.

How does the IBTM work?

Upon arrival to DJJ, each youth is assessed to determine needs and strengths in the following areas:

- Education
- Vocational Education
- Medical
- Mental Health
- Attitudes
- Family and Community Support
- Skills and Strengths
- Risk to Commit Future Crimes

Using that information, staff work with the youth and family to develop a case plan for the youth's success. The youth will be an active participant in developing and revising the plan.

Are families involved?

Recognizing the importance of family/community involvement, "families" are encouraged to participate in case planning as well as other activities throughout the youth's stay.

Families are an important part of the IBTM.

What's happening now?

Many parts of the Integrated Behavior Treatment Model have already been implemented at all DJJ facilities. However, to best serve our youth, more work needs to be done. In October 2010, staff began receiving additional training and support to fully implement the model. These efforts began on two living units at O. H. Close Youth Correctional Facility (OHCYCF). Implementation is continuing a few living units at a time, until all living units at all facilities have fully implemented the IBTM.

Who will answer my questions?

You are encouraged to provide suggestions to help us reach our goal. Each youth has a parole agent or casework specialist who can be contacted for additional information.

Success.....Graduation Day!
